

Nicholas Parrott is a Research Associate at Cardiff University, studying the links between organic and quality foods and rural development. His doctoral thesis was on the environmental impact of road schemes in rural Wales. Other publications include work on crafts producers, artisanal cheesemaking, farmers' markets and a walking guide 'The West Yorkshire Way'.

Professor Terry Marsden is Head of the Department of City and Regional Planning at Cardiff University. He is presently Special Advisor on rural affairs for the National Assembly of Wales, Special Advisor to the Welsh Affairs Select Committee and co-director of the Economic and Social Research Councils' Research Centre for Business Relationships, Accountability, Sustainability and Society. His research interests are focused around rural development, agro-food studies and environment policy and planning.

For some, talk of 'sustainable agriculture' sounds like a luxury the poor can ill afford. But in truth it is good science, addressing real needs and delivering real results.

New Scientist

Greenpeace Environmental Trust

Canonbury Villas, London N1 2PN, United Kingdom
www.greenpeace.org.uk/trust

€ 12

ISBN 1 903907 02 0